SPECIAL EDITION RELATED TO COVID-19
SMALL STEPS, BIG LEAPS: SOLUTIONS FOR SUSTAINABLE IMPACT

Within the spirit of the overall programme, calling for best practices related to COVID-19 for projects and initiatives delivering robust and sustainable solutions to address the global pandemic and achieve Agenda 2030. This call for proposals is aimed at highlighting the importance and enhancing visibility of cross-sector integrated solutions, helping people prepare, respond and recover from the effects of the COVID-19 global pandemic.

1. CONTEXT: SITUATING EXPO'S GLOBAL BEST PRACTICE PROGRAMME WITHIN THE COVID-19 CURRENT REALITY AND POST-CRISIS SITUATION

Since the arrival of the coronavirus pandemic (COVID-19), the global context for development has fundamentally changed. The COVID-19 pandemic is of a scale most people alive today have never seen. Worldwide, the outbreak continues to claim lives and livelihoods as health systems buckle, borders close and families struggle economically to stay afloat. Communities across the globe are rising to the challenge – from health workers risking their lives to fight the virus, to young people deploying innovative ways to share public health information. Yet, even as the spread of the virus eventually slows in some countries, its social toll will come fast and hard. And in many societies, it comes at the expense of the most vulnerable populations in places with the weakest health systems.

Protecting human health and dignity, whilst respecting universal values with COVID-19 as a backdrop, remains a significant challenge. In today's globalised world, the current health crisis highlights the intricate linkages between the world economy, social values, geopolitics and the global environmental commons. It is a reminder to the global community that mutual solidarity is key to resolving the economic, humanitarian and development challenges ahead. Making the right decisions as the world recovers from COVID-19, is potentially the beginning of a new chapter; transforming our planet and societies for the greater good, through actions that are a conduit to global solidarity and social cohesion, based on accountability, good governance and trust.

Five years on from the launch of the 2030 Agenda, outlining a universal call to action to end poverty, protect the planet and improve the lives of all people, 2020 was marked the 'super year' with increased commitment and efforts by governments across the world to achieve the 17 Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs). Within just a few months, the decade of action and delivery has become a 'decade of recovery'. As the virus continues to magnify the exhaustiveness of current global structures, the importance of scaling up effective responses is increasing.

The widespread impacts of the current pandemic call upon both global and local coordinated and consolidated responses; paired with proper resources to fund a strong humanitarian response across all countries and the development of new medicines and vaccines available to all, so that no one is left behind. Communities and actor's world over are taking action and applying solutions that span across technology, healthcare, last mile delivery, and response and recovery mechanisms.

Small steps that lead to big leaps are essential, to overcome the crisis the entire world is grappling with. There will be no great reset or recovery for the better unless we, as actors and custodians of the global economy, find a way to bring everyone with us; the only sustainable way forward is an inclusive one. This special edition of the Programme will gather and spotlight effective and successful initiatives for localising response and recovery that can be adapted, replicated and scaled for enhanced impact worldwide.

2. BEST PRACTICES FOR A BETTER NORMAL (A MORE RESILIENT WORLD FOR PEOPLE AND THE PLANET)

This Special Edition COVID-19 Best Practice Call is aimed at recognising and promoting visibility of integrated development best practices for a better 2030 with a particular view on building back better and moving towards a “better normal” as we come out of the ongoing crisis. The 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development serves as an urgent and constant reminder that a more equitable, just and green world is a top priority for all. It is even more pressing than ever before to come together as a global community to push the needle forward on the SDGs for more resilient people and planet.

We are calling for short and long term solutions, based on new and innovative approaches to health services, public spaces, technology, education, livelihoods and basic amenities and services.

The call for proposals will run between September – December 2020, inviting individuals, communities, NGOs, start-ups, health workers, businesses, governments and international organisations to share solutions from around the world in response to tackling COVID-19.

By sharing success stories with visitors and participants from across the world, the Programme will place people at the centre of change, with communities as the ultimate beneficiaries.

2.1 DEFINING BEST PRACTICES FOR A BETTER 2030

As per the definition shared by the international community, “best practices” are initiatives which have consistently shown results superior to those achieved with other means, and which are used as a benchmark or are setting a benchmark. In addition, best practices:

- have a demonstrable and tangible impact on improving people’s quality of life
- highlight the interconnected nature of interventions and how ripple effects play out
- are the results of effective partnership between multiple actors on the value chain (the public, private and civic sectors of society)
- can be transferred, adapted, replicated or scaled in other places

For the purpose of this call, Expo 2020 Dubai defines Best Practice as ‘a simple tangible successful solution or initiative, implemented by individuals or communities or agencies in partnership to address integrated development challenges that can be adapted or replicated to scale globally for sustainable impact’.

2.2 SOLUTIONS STREAMS FOR BP2030

Initiatives recognised under the Programme should relate to one of the following five solution streams and focus on one of the five topical pillars.

Solution streams:

- Unsung heroes (individuals) – including frontline workers, first respondents, delivery to last mile, teachers, health professionals and carers
- Community in solidarity – people coming together as a group to help other community members (eg. community-based and voluntary organisations) and / or NGOs, foundations, social enterprises, cooperatives implementing first hand responses
- Campaigns – relating to raising awareness, marketing, public health advertisements, social media (hashtags) and educational movements

- Creative partnerships – international cooperation and collaboration between different actors in action
- Government responses – at agile approaches led by governments for example efficient distribution of PPE to frontline health workers; making clean water and sanitation facilities available; ensuring academic learning continues outside of classrooms; supporting businesses and workforces; and making recoveries from the pandemic as green as possible

2.3 TOPICAL PRIORITIES

Solutions can cover any of these five topics:

• Health & wellbeing: The world is currently in the midst of a severe and acute public health emergency due to the ongoing global pandemic. COVID-19 is placing unprecedented strain on national health systems and exacerbating pre-existing health inequalities. This is having a significant toll on people's wellbeing as they confront challenges such as social distancing and self-isolation, loneliness, anxiety disorders and the virus outbreak itself. With healthcare workers on the frontline, directly engaged in diagnosing, treating or providing care to patients with suspected or confirmed COVID-19, they are at increased risk of psychological problems and moral injury when dealing with challenges associated with the virus.

Best practices relating to this topic should reflect innovative solutions around integrated health care delivery and could include mobile health mechanisms, community health workers (CHWs) and frontline workers, as well as the distribution of personal protective equipment (PPE). Solutions related to this topic could also respond to the challenges of protecting mental and physical wellbeing of healthcare professionals and civil society, ensuring transmission of the virus is suppressed and risk of infection mitigated.

• Water, sanitation and hygiene (WASH): For the first time in living memory, the world is focused on a common goal: beating COVID-19. Using the 2030 Agenda as a roadmap, the human centric approach calls for investment in water and sanitation (Sustainable Development Goal 6) – which still lags far behind in many parts of the world. Inadequate access to appropriate hygiene services, hand washing facilities and clean water is a fundamental component of many compounding social problems in developing and developed countries alike, leading to millions of preventable deaths each year. Limited access to these basic services and safe water impedes individuals and the global economy, perpetuating the cycle of poverty, stigma and lack of opportunity.

Best practices relating to this topic should reflect WASH as a first line of defense against the virus and should support the human rights approach which includes: accessibility, affordability and acceptability of services; paired with focused attention to the importance of behaviour change and removing societal taboos relating to sanitation and hand-washing.

• Education and skills development: The global context for education and skills development has fundamentally changed following the COVID-19 outbreak. The pandemic has resulted in schools not opening across the world, with over 1.2 billion children out of the classroom at some point during various lockdowns within countries. The disruption of learning and children unable to physically attend school has significantly changed traditional modes of education. E-learning and smart education have emerged as core components for many students across the world. Yet not all students have access to online and tech-related resources.

Best practices relating to this topic should showcase effective approaches to impactful learning experiences for all students, anywhere; these could include smart solutions or activity-based methodology led by parents, guardians or relatives.

• Protecting livelihoods: Informal workers, which represent 1.6 billion people across the world, have experienced significant impacts from the effects of COVID-19 and various lockdown measures. From street vendors and market traders, to waste pickers and domestic workers - economies depend on this workforce. Those in the informal economy need to earn an income to provide food for themselves and their families, as the majority of them cannot depend on income replacement or monetary savings. Not working and having to stay home, means losing their jobs and livelihoods.

Insecure livelihoods, which affect poor and rich communities alike, takes many forms, ranging from informal employment to the working poor. As the world attempts to reopen, measures to mitigate the growing difficulties faced by these workforces must be addressed.

Best practices relating to this topic should convey solutions that support the creation of new enterprises that offer and promote alternative employment and income opportunities, greater inclusion of women in the workplace, enhanced competitiveness of products and services, and improved market access.

• Digitalisation: Technology is playing a pivotal role in tracing, tackling and preventing the spread of the virus. Digital solutions are creating effective services and software, remote working solutions, along with implementing deployment mechanisms to benefit society. Currently 3.6 billion people in the world do not have access to internet, yet online and digital tools are increasingly playing a critical role for communication, awareness-raising, teleworking and skills development. The COVID-19 pandemic has demonstrated that we have only just scratched the surface of how we can use digital connectivity to lead and develop our lives. The decade of action will be a decade of accelerated technological progress, outlined by artificial intelligence (AI), robotics and the Internet of Things (IoT).

Best practices relating to this topic should showcase affordable and scalable technological solutions that accelerate progress towards achieving the SDGs, mobilising communities to build forward. They could include how digital transformation is playing a pivotal role in all stages of recovery phases via e-solutions such as: digital payments for service provision; geospatial technology for mapping hotspots for hunger, water insecurity and disease incidences; tracking and tracing apps for COVID-19; upskilling workforces to become digitally literate; and improving digital connectivity, such as connecting farmers to markets (value chains).
