27	The Institute for Nanomaterials, Advanced Technologies and Innovation, Technical University of Liberec	Adam Blazek	Industry Relations Director	The Institute for Nanomaterials, Advanced Technology and Innovation is a research centre of the Technical University of Liberec (TUL). Its aim is to contribute to the development of the region, which is traditionally oriented to technical industries. The Institute connects the laboratories of the technical disciplines at TUL and cooperation with major players in industry. Research programs focus on areas of material research and competitive engineering with an emphasis on the usability of the research and development results in practice. In addition to focusing on the processing and use of new progressive materials (especially nanomaterials, composites), the Institute focuses on the development and use of advanced engineering structures and technologies (especially additive technologies, mechatronic systems, power units, etc.) and IoT. One of the priorities is the application of research and development results and their usability in practice. Our accredited laboratories provide water, soil and air analysis services, including cleaning of the affected area.	We are looking for partners to work primarily in contract research and joint research projects in the areas of advanced engineering technology, material research and IoT. The target group are universities, research organizations and companies. We offer cooperation with a renowned research organization with a 60-year tradition, which is part of larger European research structures in the field of material research and advanced engineering.	cxi.tul.cz/en
